Greetings from Montezuma,

I want to share with our larger community that we are moving our students off campus in the interest of their health and safety and based on the closure of schools in the state of New Mexico. By Friday, the students will be back in their own homes or placed in host families as we transition to an online learning model for the remainder of the semester. Our faculty is working around the clock to make sure our students experience as little educational disruption as possible in this remarkable time.

Big challenges can lead to significant learning and the coronavirus pandemic is no exception. To learn more about our plans, what the immediate future holds, and more details about our response, please visit the website for further information.

As the faculty and staff rallied to help students with IB projects, packing, and arranging travel, I was amazed at how everyone pulled together in very short order. We'll work with the second-year students to complete their IB studies and we're preparing to welcome the first-year students and a cohort of brand new first-years next academic year.

Thank you for all of your encouragement and offers of help and support. It means so much to all of us that we have so many people pulling for us all around the world.

My very best,

Victoria J. Mora, Ph.D.
